PART I

How do we study men who have been shut up, and who ask to be let out; and men who shut up other men?

1.	Introduction. Why not to read this book, etc.	7
2.	The plan of the book and the reasons for the plan	11
3.	Early decisions about this study	13
4.	Roughly what we did	15
5.	Goals of the research, goals of "Corrections" and the relationship between researchers and "Correctors"	21
6.	Facts and assumptions about crime, contra-crime, parole and research in the present study	25

PART II

Which men do they provisionally let out early, and why?

7.	The nature of the information used	37
8.	Summary of the information used, up to release on parole or its refusal	47
9.	The relationship between the granting or refusal of parole and individual items of information. Parole selection as a purposeful or as a bureaucratic activity	51
10.	The nature of prediction	69
11.	Prediction in criminology. Predicting the granting or refusing of parole	77

PART III

Which men do they shut up again, and why?

What is this all about?

Section	page
12. The idea of success in losing or keeping the partial freedom conferred by parole	91
13. The relationship between the loss or keeping of parole and individual items of information, and a comparison with section 9. More about purposeful and bureaucratic activities	97
14. Predicting the keeping or loss of partial freedom	107
15. The relationship between granting or refusing parole and keeping or losing this partial freedom. Confirmation of the findings of earlier sections	115
16. Conclusions and inconclusions	121
